four children on the small farm in the cove. It is to be supposed that the woman, who was a Bymun by blood as well as by marriage, did not fall to teach her children the catechism of vengeauce; but, however this may be, hostilitles were renewed as soon as the boys were phi enough to follow in the footsteps of their elders. Uol. Latimer, the squire's son and helr, inherited little of the peace-loving temper of his father. The first time he found his fences thrown down and the cattle in his fields, he armed himself with a heavy riding whip and went about nursing his wrath till his opportunity should arrive. Meeting Jeff Bynum in the street of Tregarthen, the judignant colonel proceeded to mete out to the younger man such a measure of chastlsement as he thought the case demanded, paving for his satisfaction a few days later with a broken arm, shattered by the bullet of an unibushed onemy. This incident was conductve to another interval of peace, for two reasons-It taught the colonel that unscrupulous tactics of his antagonists he contest: and the Bynums were refrom further Im gressions by a fear of some such conse-

The fire of enmity, however, was pever suffered to die. There were fitful bursts of flame from time to time, and fresh fuel was added when the sleepy village of Tregarthen awoke one ng to find itself the headquarters of the Tregarthen Coal & Iron company. All of the coal and Iron land on he mountain belonged originally to the Latimer estate, but the Bynnms had disputed with the colonel the ownership to one of the coal veins which cropped out near the boundary of Me-Nabb's cove. They were defented in the litigation that followed, and the old feud lost none of its rancor by the decialon of the courts. When its right to the McNabb vein had been established the company had endeavored to open it, but the overhanging stratum of sandstone proved to be singularly intractaable, and the further development of the vein was postponed until auch time an the depth of the other workings would make it less costly to timber the Me Nabh tunnel. Opinions varied as to the enuse of the difficulty in the McNabb. Expert mining engineers had declared that the sandatone forming the roof of the tunnel was as do them no good." tenacions an that overlying the other velns, and that there was no apparent reason why it should require timbering; but the indubitable fact remained. While the work of development was in progress, the miners frequently found the labor of a week undone in a single night by a caving of the roof which filled the tunnel with broken rock. Ludlow had its own theory about these mysterious accidents, but he kept it to lmself. It was auggested by the smell of blank powder which he detected one morning when he was examining the debria that had fallen during the previous night. It struck him as beng curions, because he knew that the ers were using dynamite; and it led to a series of casual inquiries among the dwellers in Harmony Valley nearest to the entrance to McNabb's Cove. The replies were not entirely convinccanse the nocturnal noises heard the valley folk might have been nothing more than the concassion of the falling rock; but Ladlow heard enough to make him believe that when low he remembers bout the broken Town Toples.

The boy's mather, to whose gentle influence the fireside gassips of Tregarthen asrrlhe the cessation of femial strife during her short life at "The Laurels," died while liester and Henry were children; and the boy had early learned the lessan of vindicliveness from the lips of overlayal servants. Uniting with a hasty and imperious temper a contempt of restraint enrious in a descendant of the conservatio e old Virginian, his rashness became a constant mennee to the preearious truce existing between the two families; and as Henry grew to manbood the colonel was often reluctanty compelled to take the side of peace for the sake of setting an example be-

I don't know how the negotiations were conducted, but Imagine the Bynuma found out that the company was in the deal ami they refused paint-blank to sell at any price That settled it, and it means that they propose to stay and fight it out There'll be a fight, too, when we try to open the McNabb vein; and I hope we can keep the Latimers out of it." "Int you mustn't get into it your self. Tom." Interposed Mrs. Ludlow. Ludlow smiled grimly. "You think I wouldn't cut much of a figure as a fire eater, don't you? Well, now, you just walt and see. When the time comes I'll not go out of my way to pick quarrel or to avoid one; but if those fellows interfere with the work they'll have to stand from under. And they'll find that they haven't a whole-souled Iraselble, generous southerner to deal with, either." It was during the summer of Ringbrand's visit to Tregarthen that the question of resuming work in the nhandoned tunnel came up ngain. Jeff Bynum heard the news in the store in the village, and he told his brother Jed when they were driving back to the

A capital atory is told of the way in which a New England aenator was once aroused to make a attrring speech. At the outset of his political enreer he had been known as a remarkably elever "orator of the atump," and inter on, in the lower house of the legislature, he made a brilliant name for blmself. But when he became a senator he ceased talking, much to the regret of his friends and admirers. Finally the liquor law came up for discussion, and the wife of a friend of the senntor, who was much interested in its passage, was greatly disappointed to see that the brilliant man had no apparent intention of joining in the discussion. She sat lown and wrote n few words on a sheet of paper, which she inclosed in an envelope and sent by a messenger to tha senator. "Do apeak! Even Balaam'a ans spoke once!" Thin brought the nenator to his feet, and ellcited one of the best speeches he ever made.-Youth's Companion.
